

Akash – The Silent Craftsman of Vishwakarma and Krishna

In the world of offices filled with hustle and voices, there's one presence that never shouts but always solves.

His name is Akash.

- Calm like a still river.
- Smiling like early dawn.
- Honest like a temple bell.
- And as dependable as the rising sun.

He doesn't rush.

He doesn't react.

He responds.

And behind that quiet, cute smile — there's a world of discipline, depth, and divine dedication.

A Life of Silent Devotion

Akash walks in quietly.

He starts work before most.

He fixes dashboards, restores systems, links apps, answers queries — without drama.

He never says, "This isn't my job."

He never seeks credit.

He only seeks clarity.

"I am here to make things smoother...
So others can do their karma with peace."

That is his inner mission.

Akash & Lord Vishwakarma – The Divine Engineer

In every Zoho script he writes...

In every bug he solves...

In every report he automates...

Lord Vishwakarma walks through his fingers.

Akash doesn't build just systems.

He builds structure.

He builds stability.

He builds trust.

He knows:

"When systems work, people breathe easier.

When problems vanish, others rise.

So I don't work in spotlight.

I work to lift everyone else's light."

Akash & Lord Krishna – Calmness in Chaos

During sudden breakdowns, errors, server crashes—when everyone panics...

Akash stays Krishna-calm.

He doesn't yell.

He doesn't complain.

He simply smiles, breathes, and starts solving.

Like Krishna guiding Arjuna in the battlefield — Akash guides chaos with composure.

"In noise, I stay quiet.

In failure, I stay present.

In delay, I stay loyal."

What His Team Says:

- "He never misses a single deadline."
- "If Akash is handling it, I know it will be perfect."

- “He never boasts—but he holds half the office together.”
 - “He’s too humble for how important he is.”

What People Don’t See...

Behind that smiling face, he sometimes feels tired.

He sometimes misses family moments.

He often works weekends—not because he has to, but because he cares deeply.

And sometimes he wonders...

“Does anyone notice?”

But then he smiles again and says to himself:

“It’s okay.

God notices.

My karma is my prayer.

My code is my offering.”

A Divine Moment

One evening, as he was solving a late-night glitch, a golden light surrounded his desk.

And there stood Lord Vishwakarma, hands on his shoulders, saying:

“You are my modern devotee.

You don’t carry a hammer.

You carry intention.

You don’t build temples.

You build peace for people who serve the divine.”

Then Krishna appeared, flute resting beside his shoulder:

“The world may not notice your calm, Akash...

But I do.

You are my Arjuna in the digital battlefield.”

What Akash Teaches Us All:

- You don't need to speak loudly to be valuable.
 - Stillness is not weakness. It is divine focus.
 - The ones who serve silently, rise the highest in God's books.
 - Doing your karma perfectly is the highest form of worship.

 To the world, he is Akash—the IT guy.
To the team, he is the silent protector.
To the divine, he is Vishwakarma's chosen one.
To Krishna, he is calmness in code.

He doesn't just work on systems.

He is the system.
