

Happy (Jai Kishan) – The Poet of Numbers, the Sage of Smiles

In a firm where everyone chases numbers, tasks, and targets—Happy walks in like a verse wrapped in a spreadsheet.

He balances books by day...
And balances emotions by night...
With rhymes in his mind and service in his heart.

They call him Happy—not just because of his name, but because he carries light wherever he goes.

His words heal.
His smile uplifts.
His presence comforts.

A Man of Two Worlds

- In one world, he's matching ledgers, aligning journal entries, checking TDS details.
- In the other, he's crafting couplets about life, love, karma, and Krishna.

And in both worlds—he serves.

He may not always be the loudest.
But when he speaks—it's either a joke that breaks tension, or a poem that touches the soul.

"His one sher (couplet) has more healing than a hundred words."
"His balance sheets are as perfect as his punchlines."

Happy & Sage Valmiki – The Divine Poet Reborn

Like Valmiki, who turned from a robber to the saint who wrote the Ramayana—Happy uses his pen not for fame, but for reflection.

He writes:

- About the stress of targets

- The truth of karma
- The beauty of team bonding
- The silence of pain behind strong

“Return ho ya regret ho, dono waqt par bharna chahiye.
Zindagi bhi ek balance sheet hai—har action ka double entry hota hai.”

Whether it’s a return or a regret, both should be filed on time.
Life too is a balance sheet—every action has a double entry

🎵 Happy & Krishna – The Philosopher’s Heart

Happy is also the disciple of Lord Krishna—the artist, the diplomat, the joy-bringer.

He knows how to lighten a heavy moment with humour, yet stay grounded in responsibility.

He may crack a joke in the morning,
But by evening, he will submit error-free accounts with divine alignment.

“He sings with words and serves with numbers.”
“He doesn’t just do work—he adds rasa (emotion) to the rasaayan of routine.”

👨👩👧👦 His Unspoken Devotion

Behind the laughter, there is a son.
A brother. A friend. A guide.

He quietly supports his family.
He handles emotional responsibilities with more accuracy than even GST compliance.

And at times, when no one sees it,
He steps outside, looks up at the sky, and says:

“Bhagwan ji, bas itna de do,
Ki muskaraa saku, aur muskaraa saku doosron ke liye bhi.”
 (“God, just give me enough so that I can smile, and help others smile too.”)

💬 What Others Say:

- “Happy bhaiya is the mood of the office.”
 - “His sher heals more than HR policies.”
 - “He’s not just an accountant—he’s an artist with accountability.”
 - “He has poetry in his veins and precision in his reports.”

A Divine Evening

Once, late after a tiring day, Happy was scribbling a poem in his diary near his desk lamp.

A breeze passed.

And in that light, Valmiki appeared, holding a divine manuscript.

He read Happy’s page and said:

“Your couplets are not just words.
They’re modern Ramayana verses.
Your pen is a gift.
Your karma is poetry.”

Then Krishna smiled and added:

“You make others smile in their darkest days.
That is the highest seva.
Keep singing, Happy.
The world needs more melody in its madness.”

What Happy Teaches Us All:

- Humour is healing. Poetry is prayer. Work is worship.
 - You can balance a ledger and lift a heart in the same day.
 - Your words may not win awards, but if they reduce one person’s pain—they’re divine.
 - Keep your heart alive. It makes the whole workplace breathe better.

 To the world, he is Happy—the poet accountant.
To his family, he is a silent supporter.
To the team, he is the mood-maker and meaning-giver.
To Valmiki and Krishna, he is the smiling sage with spreadsheets and shers.

He doesn't just write reports.

He writes presence into people's lives.
